

Growers invited to have their say on citrus levies

Growers can have input into the future of their levies at Citrus Australia's upcoming regional forums, to be held across the south eastern growing regions.

Growers, along with packers, marketers and supply chain stakeholders, are invited to attend the forums, which will also showcase the latest developments in market access and biosecurity.

Citrus Australia Chief Executive Officer Judith Damiani says currently growers pay $2/tonne to Horticulture Australia and Plant Health Australia to fund the national citrus research and development (R&D) program and biosecurity.

"This is not enough to fund the five year industry strategy which the industry has agreed upon.

"To build a profitable future for citrus in the Asian century we need greater investment in R&D and biosecurity."

Citrus Australia has begun consulting with growers around a proposed combined levy increase of $1.50/tonne. This change would increase the R&D levy from $1.97/tonne to $3.20/tonne, while also lifting the biosecurity level from $0.03/tonne to $0.30/tonne.

Judith says the R&D levy has not increased for almost 20 years. "It is like running today's business with a 20-year-old budget."

She says the raised R&D levy would target export and domestic market opportunities for higher priced products.

"This means better on-farm productivity and better access to new markets."

Past research has led to new markets, including China and the Philippines; and improvements in others such as Japan.

"Our China trade last year was worth $21 million, up from nothing in 2010. That is really making your levies work for you."

An increase in the biosecurity levy would fund critical programs that safeguard the health of Australia's citrus industry against Huanglongbing and citrus canker, as well as including the National Fruit Fly Strategy.
